Learning Objectives

- To learn how to use a range of techniques to structure your narratives in ways that keep readers engaged and entertained.

So, what makes a good opening?

Writers often use openings of stories to establish particular things such as:

- The mood/atmosphere or time
- The setting or location
- A particular character or relationship
- A key event or action
- Direct contact with the reader
- Raises questions for the reader

Using this photo as a prompt, write the opening 7 lines of a story. Think about all the things we have considered this lesson.
